Giving Directions Indications de directions

Compétence à acquérir : comprendre les indications de direction pour se rendre à un endroit proche

Dans le test du TOEIC, vous pourrez entendre des gens qui demandent et qui donnent des indications pour se rendre à un endroit proche. Les personnes qui demandent ces renseignements se déplacent à pied (piéton : pedestrian), en voiture ou en métro. Lorsqu'une personne en renseigne une autre, elle mentionne souvent des points de repère (landmarks) dans les environs (in the vicinity) pour l'aider à s'orienter. Elle peut évaluer la distance à parcourir en termes de pâtés de maisons (blocks) et décrire la rue. Cette dernière est peut-être large (broad) ou escarpée (steep). La personne qui renseigne dit aussi où il faut tourner, où il faut traverser la rue et combien de temps il faut pour arriver à destination.

A person who is new to your city may ask you for directions. It is best to explain the easiest way to the destination, even if it is not the shortest. Because this person is not familiar with the vicinity, it is a good idea to mention landmarks, such as any noticeable stores or apartment buildings, parks, or even billboards. If the person is on foot and has to cross a traffic-filled street, it is nice to explain where the easiest place to cross is (and always in a crosswalk, of course!). It is also a good idea to tell a pedestrian how many blocks he or she will have to walk to arrive at the destination. Then, if it seems too far, you can always suggest taking the bus or subway. An even better solution might be a taxi as in that case, no directions are needed at all!

En Grande-Bretagne, il s'appelle a car park.

► Attention

Il ne faut pas confondre beside et besides.

Beside est une préposition de lieu qui signifie next to (à côté de, près de).

My desk is beside the window.

Besides est un adverbe qui signifie also ou in addition (en outre, de plus). C'est aussi une préposition signifiant in addition to (outre, en plus de).

There are many other cafes in this neighborhood besides the one downstairs.

Beside peut parfois s'employer avec le même sens que besides. Mais besides ne peut jamais s'employer comme préposition de lieu avec le sens de près de.
